Flooding widespread, claims more lives

Southeast paralyzed by storm

Associated Press

Atlanta. — More than 5 feet of rain fell through the streets of Atlanta, Monday, keeping some people out of their homes, after a day of drenching rain sent a creek gushing through a levee.

Eight deaths are blamed on the storm across the Southeast.

City officials closed roads and the flooding might continue the next couple of days. In the Pea River, the main water flowing past the town, about 3 inches overnight, work how much I've got, I'll have in my station. Willie Lethcoe, who lives at an elementary school with a puppy. Others left their boats or Army helicopters. I went back and see how bad it is. I'm afraid."

He rose so fast that city officials didn't have time to go door-to-door warning people," said Greg, the city water department. "The fastest I've ever seen it," he said.

The El Nino-powered storm also flooded creeks and streams in much of Georgia and caused tornadoes this morning in Florida, where 42 people died in twisters last month.

Damage was reported Monday across Florida in retirement communities, mobile home parks and campgrounds. About 150,000 people lost power this morning from Ocala, west of Daytona Beach, to the Miami area, utility officials said.

Fourteen people were injured in Florida, one seriously; one person was killed Sunday when a tree fell on his car.

A possible tornado also destroyed three houses in North Carolina, where flooded roads delayed some school openings.

"I think we've emptied the Gulf of Mexico over these Southern states the past few days," said Jerry Bange, spokesman for the emergency management agency in southeast Georgia's Appling County, where schools were closed.

Southeast Georgia got 5 inches of rain in 24 hours Sunday, and Atlanta got 3.5 inches. In southern Alabama, where Gov. Fob James declared a state of emergency, 8 inches fell over three days.

The severe weather was part of a huge weather system that also dropped up to 18 inches of snow across the Midwest, with drifts standing 12 feet high Monday in Des Moines, Iowa. That part of the storm was blamed for two traffic deaths in Kansas and one in Wisconsin, and more than 250 miles of Interstate 80 remained closed Monday in Nebraska.

Kansas sent National Guard troops out Sunday night to enforce road blocks, and Nebraska rescue teams had to fetch motorists who tried to travel Sunday but became snowbound southeast of Lincoln.

"They're not using good sense," said an angry Otoe County, Neb., Emergency Manager Don Chapin. "It's very dangerous for anyone out there on the highway."

The 4,000 residents of Elba dealt with a similar flood in 1990, when the Pea River levee collapsed. On Sunday, two breaks developed in another levee that protects the town from a tributary of the river.

James ordered the National Guard to help with sandbagging and patrol downtown Elba in pontoon boats with spotlights to avoid a repeat of 1990, when thieves with scuba gear floated in at night.

A child and a 59-year-old man drowned in Elba when their vehicle was swept away by the water Sunday morning near the main break in the levee, Police Chief Ronnie Whitworth said.

In rural Gantt in neighboring Covington County, a motorist drowned early Sunday when he drove his car onto a road that had been washed away by a flooded creek. Sheriff Wilbur Mitchell said 95 percent of the county's roads were impassable.

Two people died Saturday during thunderstorms in Mobile, 128 miles southwest of Elba. One was struck by lightning, and the other was swept into a drainage ditch.

One woman was killed by lightning Saturday in Shreveport, La., during storms that dropped hail up to 7 inches in diameter.

And in Georgia, a 20-month-old boy was swept from a car that skidded into a creek that turned into a raging torrent. Rescuers doubted the baby would be found alive, although a search resumes this morning.

Pres. Monson to speak on making choices

By JENNI LESTER
Universe Staff Writer

President Thomas S. Monson, first counselor in the First Presidency of the LDS Church, will give a Devotional speech on "Your Choice" at 11 a.m. today in the Marriott Center.

The address will cover four main questions: Shall I serve a full time mission? What shall I study to prepare for my life's work? Whom shall I marry? and How shall I serve?

President Monson will also preside over the dedication of the Carl F. Eyring Science Center at 2 p.m. today.

President Monson has some good advice that will impact the audience's lives, said President Monson's secretary, Lynne Cannegieter. The points President Monson covers in his Devotional speech are universal and should apply to everyone, she said.

The future holds many difficult and eternal choices, according to

President Monson.

It is important to prepare for future choices because the outcome of those choices determine destiny, he said. Guidance is given in making those decisions, however.

According to President Monson when he has a difficult decision to make, he asks himself the question, "What would Christ do?"

According to a news release, President Monson served in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles before being called as a member of the First Presidency Nov. 10, 1985.

PRESIDENT MONSON

President Monson has also played an active role in the community as a member of the National Executive Board of Boy Scouts of America, chair of the board of Deseret News Publishing Co., president of Printing Industry of Utah and a board member of the board of directors of Printing Industry of America.

Victims go without aid

Associated Press

KARACHI, Pakistan — Receding flood waters made a mud bog out of a wide stretch of southwestern Pakistan, hampering rescue efforts Monday and raising fears of a cholera epidemic among hundreds of thousands of now-homeless victims.

More than 1,000 people are still missing and presumed dead since flash floods roared through the Turbat district of the western Baluchistan province last week, killing 300 people outright.

"We fear the victims were buried in the mud or swept away to sea," said Turbat, deputy commissioner Fida Hussein Afridi. "There is little hope now that any of them will be found alive."

Rains that began last week turned the Dasht River into a powerful torrent that destroyed thousands of mud and brick homes in the poor, remote area. Some villagers survived by clinging to trees.

"The whole area is littered with animal carcasses, and we are worried about an outbreak of cholera," Afridi said.

He said hundreds of villagers are already suffering from diarrhea and other stomach ailments, and few have access to clean drinking water.

Afridi appealed for more aid, saying the federal government has not supplied nearly enough food, medicine or tents. In addition, vast stretches of mud left by the ebbing flood waters are hampering rescue efforts, he said.

A Pakistani air force supply plane was unable to land, and airdrops had to be called off after the aid packages sank in mud up to 12 feet deep.

Only two helicopters have brought in aid to villages spread across the vast Mekron Coast, an area of more than 4,000 square miles.

Rescue teams haven't yet reached some of the more isolated villages, where communications and roads were poor or nonexistent before the flooding started.

The World Health Organization has supplied $10,000 worth of medicine, said Iftikhar Rehman, a U.N. spokesman in the Pakistani capital, Islamabad. The U.N.'s Children's Fund also has donated 30,000 rehydration packets and tons of milk powder, he said.

County growth attracts business

Hours and city officials at Utah and quality of life

Utah provides a better environment for start-up businesses. The county has a lot of growth, and the county is a good place to start a business.

Management's Center for Entrepreneurship. His company produces a gross of more than $1 million a year.

Despite Utah County's rapid growth, Steve Gleason, an economic development specialist for Provo City, said Provo strikes a medium between a large city and a small town.

"We have all the amenities of a big city but the look and the feel of a kind of home town," he said.

maintain our market share," Turley said.

Turley got involved in the roofing industry when he answered an ad for a part-time job listed on the BYU job board.

He soon decided to venture out on his own and managed his own roofing company while attending school full-time.

In 1993, Turley was named Student Entrepreneur of the Year by the Marriott School of Management's Center for Entrepreneurship.

His company produces a gross of more than $1 million a year.

Despite Utah County's rapid growth, Steve Gleason, an economic development specialist for Provo City, said Provo strikes a medium between a large city and a small town.

"We have all the amenities of a big city but the look and the feel of a kind of home town," he said.

Gleason also said businesses enjoy some of the lowest taxes, costs of living and construction costs in the nation. BYU provides excellent resources as well, Gleason said.

"Having the nation's largest private university in your city is a huge incentive for people to come start a business," Gleason said. "BYU puts out a lot of very qualified people in a number of different fields. It is pretty well known for having a good student base for employers to pull from."

Multimillion dollar companies like Franklin Covey, Hogi Yogi and Nu Skin continue to grow with Utah County and depend on many BYU and UVSC students to fill their work force.

John Liu, owner of computer company Access Systems, said he decided to start his company in Provo because of the number of talented people.

"It is easy to find young, dedicated people who are willing to work for a lot of good experience," Liu said.

The State Legislature recently passed a bill allocating 500 acres in American Fork to help facilitate business growth in Utah County.

Elder Goasland to speak tonight

By JARED GOOCH
Universe Staff Writer

Elder Jack H. Goasland, of the First Quorum of the Seventy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will address all prospective missionaries in a fireside today in the Wilkinson Center Ballroom at 7:30 p.m.

"This will be of real interest to anyone who is preparing to go on a mission," said Lawrence Flake, professor of church history and doctrine for the Sharing the Gospel program. "It is a powerful experience. We would really like to have everyone come that is interested."

"I think it is good preparation for missionaries entering the mission field," said Brian Craven, a sophomore from Harrison, Mich., majoring in civil engineering. "Coming from the Eastern United States, the opportunities to hear from general authorities like that doesn't come too often, especially on a specific topic like this."

The fireside is sponsored every semester by BYU's Church History and Doctrine Department. The address focuses on how to prepare for the mission field.

"We do it each semester," Flake said. "It's always a general authority that comes. Last year we had Elder Packer and Elder Holland."

The fireside is intended for the 2,000 students who are enrolled in the Sharing the Gospel programs both at BYU and Utah Valley State College.

The fireside is also open to anyone who wants to come. Those who have attended the address in years past think it is important for a large percentage of BYU's student body.

"Here at BYU there are so many returned missionaries that the focus is often what you did on your mission rather than how to prepare for it," said Cherisse Lyon, a sophomore from Westminster, Colo., majoring in statistics. "I think it is great that they can focus on just prospective missionaries."

Elder Goasland was called to the Quorum of the Seventy on Sept. 30, 1978. Prior to that, he served as a bishop, a stake president, a regional representative, a counselor in the General Presidency of the Aaronic Priesthood Mutual Improvement Association and a mission president for the Arizona Tempe Mission.

Elder Goasland has received numerous awards for his contributions to the Boy Scouts of America. Among these awards is the Silver Beaver, awarded in 1994, and the Silver Buffalo, awarded in 1995.

He received a bachelor's degree from the University of Utah and later served two years as an officer in the U.S. Air Force.

100,000 workers strike in Algeria

ALGIERS, Algeria — More than 100,000 Algerian metal and steel workers, mechanics and customs employees went on strike Monday to protest government plans to cut public jobs.

The General Union of Algerian Workers said the one-day walkouts were called to oppose the "disintegration of social conditions and the government's closing of public sector firms and reduction of staffs without consulting the unions."

The strike by customs officials coincides with an internal anti-corruption campaign the government is launching in that sector.

The walkout follows strikes by postal and food industry workers. Algeria suffers high unemployment, especially among young people, and planned privatizations and government cutbacks leave public sector workers vulnerable.

Algerian security forces reported that attackers killed four villagers early Monday in Targuiya, a hamlet not far from the Tunisian border.

No details were provided and no one claimed responsibility.

2 kids die while playing in freezer

ALBERT LEA, Minn. — A young brother and sister died after accidentally shutting themselves inside an unplugged freezer, police said Monday.

Ciarra Baseman, 4, and Duaine Baseman, 23 months, died Sunday in their basement, Assistant Police Chief Dwaine Winkels said.

Their father, Mike Baseman, found the children in the chest-style freezer unconscious and not breathing. He called 911, but efforts to resuscitate the children were unsuccessful. The mother was not home.

Authorities estimate the children were in the freezer for an hour. Police consider the deaths an accident.

Police Chief Tom Menning said the freezer lid had been left open and objects nearby allowed the 4-year-old to climb in. He was unsure how the younger child got in.

State law says freezers that are not in use and that fasten automatically when closed must not be accessible to children.

Gas prices on a downward trend

LOS ANGELES — Remember the good old days? When it comes to paying for gasoline, this is one of them.

Motorists can thank dropping crude oil prices and a price war among refiners and distributors, an industry analyst said.

The average all-grade pump price has dropped nearly 3 cents since Feb. 20, analyst Tribby Lundberg said Sunday.

The national average for self- and full-service combined was $1.0924 as of March 6, according to the Lundberg Survey of 10,000 gas stations nationwide.

When the figures are adjusted for inflation, it means customers are getting the lowest price ever, she said.

Crude continued its slump from the $24-per-barrel range late last year to below $15.

One of last Titanic survivors dies

ELGIN, Ill. — Eleanor I. Shuman, one of the last survivors of the Titanic, died Saturday at age 87.

Shuman, who was less than 2 years old when the ship went down in 1912, was with her mother, brother and two Swedish teens traveling with the family during the voyage home from Europe following a visit to relatives. All five were among the 706 survivors.

Shuman saw the premiere of the movie "Titanic" last year in Chicago and met director James Cameron there.

"He said I reminded him of Rose, the girl in the movie," Shuman told a reporter later. "So when you see Rose, think of me."

Shuman said the movie revived memories even though she was only a toddler when the ship sank.

"I can still see all the hands reaching up to me from below," she said in a December interview. "I didn't want to go. And I remember the noise. Everybody was yelling and crying and screaming."

The movie, she said, was so realistic that it was difficult to watch.

Scripture of the Day

"What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same."
— D&C 1:38

Ricks feels enrollment pinch

Associated Press

The decades don't seem to fly by fast at the LDS Church-owned Ricks College, a school with about 8,000 students built on a hillside at the edge of eastern Idaho's dinner-plate-flat Snake River Plain.

You won't find college kids with little barbells punched through their tongues or Dayglo green hair. Heck, even shorts are prohibited — including those funky knee-length dungarees so popular at the school's big brother, Brigham Young University, also owned by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

What you will find at America's largest private junior college is students in church on Sunday and in bed early Saturday night — alone. Visitors of the opposite sex are prohibited in unmarried students' off-campus apartments after 10 p.m., midnight on weekends.

Beer bashes? Try dry dances, where students might hone moves studied in clogging class.

It's like a time warp. Two generations ago, most American college campuses were rigidly-ruled environments designed to safely mold a kid into an adult. Today most campuses are socially lax atmospheres where students are free, if not encouraged, to recreate on their own.

But Ricks is different. A student's experience at the 109-year-old school likely would mirror that of a student three decades ago, and that is by design.

"There has always been a little bit more of a parental feeling in the way the college has related to its students," said Elder Henry B. Eyring, a past Ricks president who is now education commissioner for the LDS Church and a member of its Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.

The student body, which is 99 percent LDS, doesn't seem to have a bad reaction to the heavy dose of authority.

"I like the structured environment. It helps keep me on task," said 21-year-old Aaron Paugh, a returned missionary. "Ricks gives you the opportunity to have fun. Clean fun ... I feel safe here."

Ricks' cloistered history dates back to 1888, when Idaho law prohibited Latter-day Saints from voting despite their dense concentration in the eastern Idaho communities that dot the banks of the Snake River.

The LDS people eventually won back the vote and by the 1960s, the school had evolved into an easy-to-get-into regional religious junior college, a place a student could move away to and still go home for Sunday dinner. It also served as a safety net for students who could not get into school anywhere else.

But Ricks is again being redefined.

The number of students has exploded from 1,800 in the mid-1960s to 8,300 today. It draws students from all 50 states and dozens of countries. This year it will turn away more than 1,000 qualified applicants.

Church leaders recently gave administrators permission to bump student numbers to 8,600, but that still isn't enough to accommodate everyone who wants to attend.

Because the pool of potential students continues to deepen because of phenomenal church growth, Ricks will continue to turn away an increasing number of applicants. It's clear that administrators are not entirely comfortable with their newfound status as a competitive school, especially since admission to BYU is exceptionally tough.

"It's awkward in the church when you have a highly selective university and then a two-year school that is also highly selective," said Ricks Admissions Director Gordon Westenskow. "It is a very hurtful thing to get a denial from a two-year college."

Westenskow said the school's mission is changing from safety net to trampoline. The goal is to launch high-caliber graduates into bachelor's degree programs at public universities across the country.

"We can crank through an awful lot of kids and disperse them out to other schools," Westenskow said. "And they can go out and strengthen the (LDS) Institutes at their colleges."

LDS Institutes can be found on public college campuses throughout the West. Their purpose is to provide a sense of community for LDS students and augment a public school's secular curriculum with religious studies.

But administrators contend Ricks is much more than a vehicle to fortify the LDS presence on public campuses.

New President David Bednar, a 45-year-old business professor plucked this year from the University of Arkansas, said he hopes to maintain Ricks' reputation as a nurturing environment.

"Our market is to help somebody who is not quite sure about this college thing, somebody who clearly has the ability but may not be totally confident," Bednar said.

Whitewater book proves dead men do tell tales

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr spoke out Monday on behalf of James McDougal's credibility, and word emerged that a new book on the flamboyant former Savings & Loan operator, likely to come out later this year, will feature McDougal's dealings with the Clintons.

In the aftermath of McDougal's death, Starr called the Clintons' chief accuser "a real Southern gentleman" who "wanted to end on a high moral note and end by telling the truth. We miss him." Sunday, Starr called McDougal an "honorable gentleman."

President Clinton — who issued a statement Sunday expressing his condolences over McDougal's death — doesn't plan to go to his former business partner's funeral, White House spokesman Mike McCurry said.

McDougal's death won't silence him quite yet — with a new book about his life and business dealings with the president and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Boston Globe reporter Curtis Wilkie said he has completed the McDougal manuscript, which carries the working title "Arkansas Mischief."

"It's his story, a great deal of it in his words," Wilkie said.

In an interview earlier this year, McDougal — who had been providing information against the Clintons to Starr since 1996 when McDougal was convicted of 18 felonies — said his book would provide new information about Whitewater regarding both the president and the first lady.

"The book is finished; I wrote it based on more than 100 interviews with him," Wilkie said.

Wilkie said he last talked to McDougal about 10 days ago and that the Clintons' former Whitewater partner had been reading the final manuscript.

Wilkie said he understands there will be discussions on advancing the publishing date, which was set for September. The publisher is Henry Holt of New York.

"They prevailed upon me to go over to Arkadelphia" where McDougal was living "right before he went to prison," Wilkie said. "I found him to be a very engaging character."

McDougal's ex-wife, Susan, began Monday serving a two-year prison term for her fraud convictions in a trial with McDougal and then-Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker.

For the past 18 months, Susan McDougal had been jailed for refusing to cooperate with Starr's inquiry, and prosecutors have raised the possibility of seeking criminal contempt and obstruction charges against her that would put her in prison for years. She faces state charges in California for allegedly stealing money from conductor Zubin Mehta and his wife.

"This is a place where students can come and receive extra help and support in finding out who they are and what they want to become — academically and spiritually."

Part of that process is adhering to something that has changed little over the years, a stringent code of conduct. Most students have no problem following the rules; administrators say only about 100 are expelled or asked not to return each year. Compliance is high because students know what to expect before they arrive. About 30 percent are returned missionaries.

"There is a strong self-selection here," said Mack Shirley, student life vice president. "Students come here because we are able to deliver something that is important for them."

Social activities include sledding, dances attended by thousands, renting movies and heading out into the surrounding wild lands. The school is less than an hour away from the southwest corner of Yellowstone National Park, and the Teton Mountains stab into the horizon 40 miles to the east.

Students say the dearth of diversions in nearly tavern-free Rexburg is compensated by the sense of community they share.

"Everybody wants to do the same thing and be the same: good," said student-body president Randy Garn. "It's a little heaven on earth. It really is."

Part of that heaven undoubtedly has to do with marriage. At Ricks, freshman flings quickly flame into commitments of lifelong fidelity.

"People even come out and are looking for a wife," said more Kirk Hamilton.

Administrators don't rely on matchmaking reputation, but are quick to point out it is a byproduct of like-minded, mating-age students seeking a quality education.

"The fundamental course is good as you'll find anywhere," said. "I wouldn't restrict the son just to BYU."

from the park," said Capt. Teuscher of the Provo Police Department. "She said that her friend had been stabbed in the hand at Pioneer Park." Atkins was taken to the Utah Valley Regional Medical Center where doctors operated on his hand. Officers searched the area for a suspect, but found no leads as to who the suspect might be. "This is a rare occurrence in our city," Capt. Teuscher said. "It isn't as if our parks aren't safe, however this incident did happen. There's always a possibility, especially when people are out so early in the morning." Teuscher said the suspect was described as wearing a black ski mask, black pants and shirt and was between 5'9" and 6'0" tall. The investigation has produced no leads as to who the suspect might be or what his motives might have been in his assault. Max Mitchell, superintendent of Provo Parks and Recreation, said there has been a rougher group of people who have started to come to Pioneer Park. "A rougher element has moved into Pioneer Park. However, we've put in lighting that stays on all night to help prevent these types of incidents," Mitchell said. "I am surprised to hear that this occurred because there haven't been too many negative incidents in our parks," Mitchell said.

first cousin, Kisina Neiufi, said Loseli was a great guy and that the alleged rape charge was false. She also said Loseli's wife, Asalika, was violent. In 1993, Asalika stabbed Loseli in the arm with a pencil or pen, and he was taken to the hospital for the wound, she said. Kisina also said Loseli was a great guy. "All he did was go to work, go home and do his church stuff," he said.

Mata Neiufi, another cousin of Loseli, said she knew Lolohea from school. "Pina (Lipina Lolohea) could be really mean," she said. "She came to our school (Alpine Life and Learning Center) and threatened us one time because of a problem we had." Another cousin of Loseli said she was riding in a car with Lolohea and her sister, Emily. The anonymous cousin said Lolohea pulled out a gun, loaded it and said, "This is the gun I am going to kill him with." The cousin said it scared her, but she thought Lolohea was kidding. At the hearing, some of Loseli's family wondered where Asalika was. Sgt. Bradley Leatham of the Provo Police Department said Asalika has been interviewed by police. Although it was rumored that she participated in the crime, Leatham said she probably will not be charged with anything. Leatham said the county attorney's office has filed for a certification hearing to certify Lolohea's 15-year-old brother as an adult. He was also charged with murder. His hearing is scheduled for Thursday at 9 a.m. in the Orem Juvenile Court.

Clinton insists tell the whole truth

Associated Press

OTON — Senate Majority Leader Lott urged President Clinton to end the "whispering" and tell "the whole truth" about his relationship with Monica Lewinsky. He also said the president should stop his "smear campaign" against independent counsel Kenneth Starr.

other Republicans over the weekend after saying Starr should accelerate the long-running Whitewater investigation into the president's private land dealings and allegations that he had an affair with former White House intern Lewinsky and covered it up. Monday, Lott told a packed Capitol meeting room that Starr "is doing a great job under very difficult circumstances." And he criticized Clinton and the White House for hindering Starr's work with "stonewalling and smear tactics and attack methods being used by his attorneys and by his allies." Lott said he hoped Starr would wrap up his work "sooner rather than later" because of the effect it is having. "It is beginning to have an impact on the presidency, on the president and on his ability to deal with many very important issues for the future of our country — from Social Security to what's going on in Iraq to now what's going on in Kosovo," Lott said. He offered few specifics about how Clinton's problems were affecting those issues but said, "I think maybe there would have been more communication, particularly by the president himself." Earlier, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., criticized Lott's comment that Congress take the less drastic course of censuring the president if Starr cannot prove Clinton engaged in anything illegal. One option for Starr, if he does not find credible evidence that Clinton obstructed justice or otherwise broke the law, is to report his findings to the House and let it decide whether to begin impeachment hearings.

LDS Church breaks ground for small temple in Toluca, Mexico

BY KATHERINE TRENDLER
Universe Staff Writer

breaking services for a new temple of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in northern Mexico on Saturday. The site is at a colony in Toluca, Mexico, established by Mormon pioneers in the 1800s called Colonia. The temple will be the second of its kind in Mexico. The first temple in Mexico is a large temple in Mexico City. Another one, the Colonia Juarez temple, was announced for Toluca, Mexico. The new temple is a larger temple because of the number of members in that area. The church is to "build temples as we can to make them available for members." "The church feels quite confident about new temples."

Micron, temple add to AF growth

By ALYSIA ANDREWS
Universe Staff Writer

American Fork is going to be the metropolitan area for Utah County in the next century, said Ted Barratt, mayor of American Fork. American Fork City engineer Howard Denney said the city is growing because of two influences: Micron's move to the area and the popularity of the Mt. Timpanogos Temple. "Some of the past few years, we have been in excess of 6 percent growth in the city," Denney said. "Experts say a 3 percent growth is dynamic, so we are growing pretty heavily."

American Fork to profit from building around the temple. Lyne Hanage, a residential developer in American Fork, said generally the land around a temple is more expensive. "In addition to that land, American Fork has many open spaces causing a more relaxed county-like feeling. Yet at the same time, it's growing to where all the (necessary) services are still here," Hanage said. In the 1980s, the city's commercial area stopped growing, Denney said. Now, however, city officials are seeing rapid growth. "The out-of-state developers I have talked to said they are really impressed with the quality of education in this area and the availability of good hard workers," said Paul Wanlass, American Fork city administrator. With population jumping 41 percent in the past seven years, many city officials agree that the city will need to improve the quality of its public buildings. "We need a new city hall," Wanlass said. "There is absolutely no room for employees. We don't even have a meeting room and we're just cramped." "The future right now is tough to predict," Denney said. "Are we going to maintain this rapid growth rate or are we going to taper out and have a more normal growth rate? Right now, the city has its hands full trying to manage and keep ahead of the growth rate."

First Counselor in the Church First Presidency and President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Before his current calling in March 1995, President Thomas S. Monson had served for 10 years as Second Counselor in the LDS Church First Presidency. He was ordained an Apostle and called to the Council of the Twelve Apostles in October of 1963. He presided over the Church's Canadian Mission from 1959 to 1962 and has served in a stake presidency and as a bishop.

President Monson graduated cum laude from the University of Utah in 1948, earning a degree in business management. He later received his MBA from Brigham Young University, and in 1981 BYU conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa. He is a U.S. Navy veteran and is a member of Alpha Kappa Psi honorary business fraternity.

President Monson has had a distinguished career in publishing and printing. He is a past president of Printing Industry of Utah and a former member of the Printing Industry of America's board of directors. He serves as a trustee of Brigham Young University and the LDS Church Board of Education.

For many years, President Monson served as a member of the Utah State Board of Regents, which governs higher education throughout the state. In 1991 he was appointed by President Reagan to serve on the President's Task Force for Private Sector Universities. In 1997 he received the Utah National Guard Minuteman Award and BYU's Exemplary Manhood Award.

President Monson was honored with the University of Utah's Distinguished Alumnus Award in 1966. He is recipient of the Silver Beaver and Silver Buffalo Awards from the Boy Scouts of America, and he holds Scouting's highest honor, the Bronze Wolf Award.

He married Frances Beverly Johnson in 1948 in the Salt Lake Temple. They are the parents of three children and grandparents of seven.

Sharing the pie

In the first of a two-part series, Sunday's New York Times described the growing conflict between American Indians and politicians. Ostensibly at stake for Gov. Mike Leavitt and Utah's congressional delegation is whether they can block the storage of nuclear waste in Utah. But there is a deeper, more fundamental issue. It comes down to a question of who makes the decisions about what American Indians can and can't do.

Traditionally, white middle- and upper-class politicians have made decisions for the American Indian. Now that the tribes want a real voice in what happens on the reservation, some politicians are becoming alarmed.

"I don't think this is what the Founding Fathers had in mind," said Rep. Merrill Cook, R-Utah, in Sunday's article, referring to new tribal ventures like casinos and nuclear storage proposals. "It's just not right, this use of sovereignty. Something is dead wrong when a small group of people can ignore the will of 90 percent of the state (of Utah). The implications are frightening for us as a nation."

Cook is certainly right that American Indians don't form a large percentage of Utah's population. According to information provided by Utah Rep. Chris Cannon's office, American Indians, Aleutian Indians and Eskimos total just 24,283 of Utah's 1,722,850 residents. But should numbers really matter? The real question is one of sovereignty. But if Cook is simply concerned that the Goshutes may act out of spite, he has a legitimate concern. Sovereignty is only meaningful within a system that has boundaries.

Strong claims of tribal sovereignty are a new, and, for some, mystifying thing. On a visit to Pueblo communities in New Mexico last month, House Speaker Newt Gingrich told American Indian leaders that he was having a hard time understanding the concept of tribal sovereignty. So Albert Hale, president of the Navajo Nation, offered an example.

"When I come to Washington, you don't send me to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. You have a state dinner for me," Hale said.

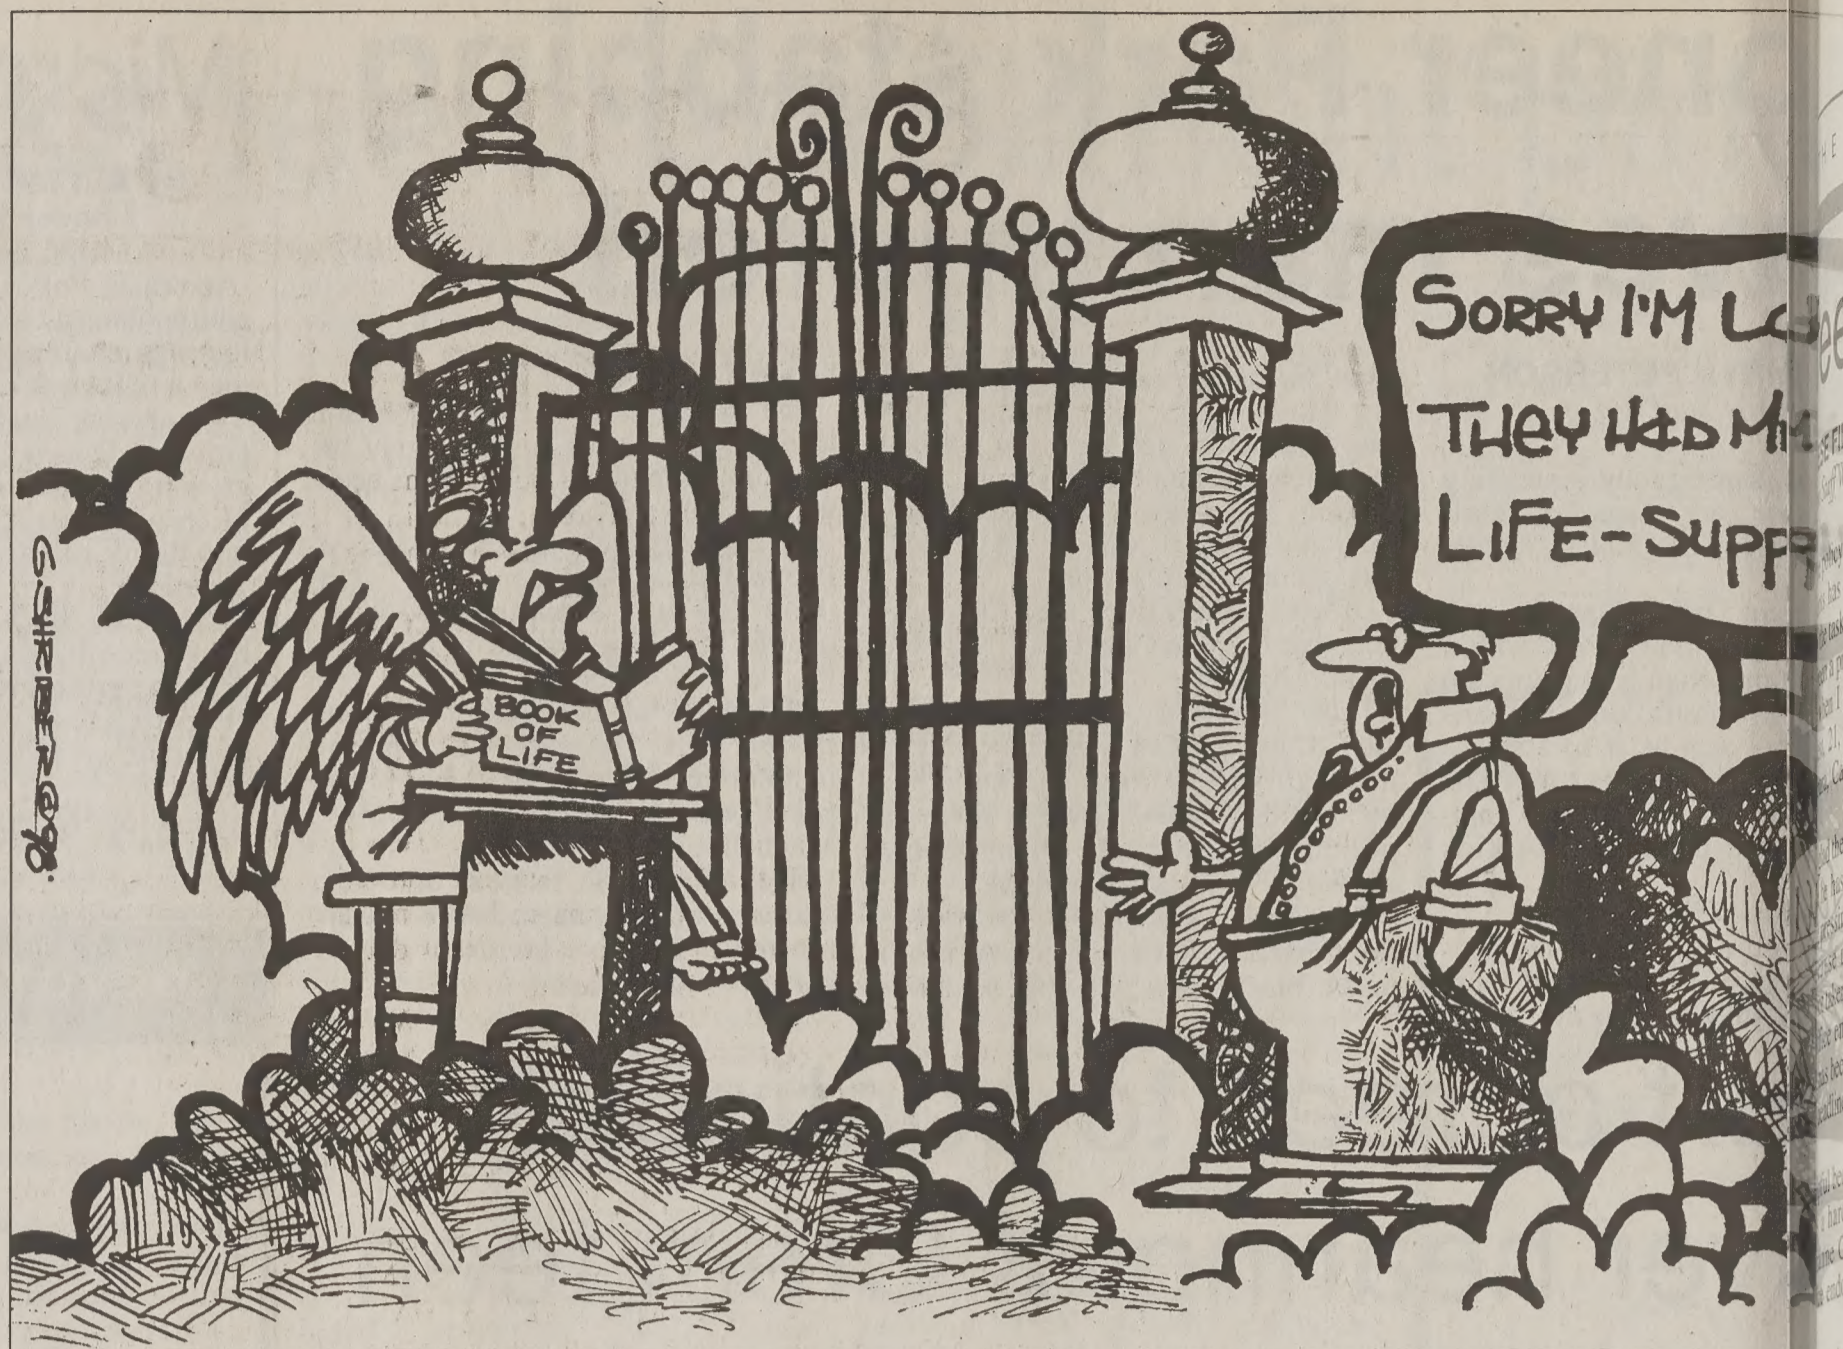

The story is instructive in the way it captures the I'm-not-being-used-for-a-door-mat-anymore attitude of many American Indian tribes.

The current generation of American Indian leaders have come to power at a time when their tribes are enjoying their first taste of economic prosperity, mostly through on-site casinos. Sunday's article reported that since Congress approved gambling operations on American Indian land in 1988, a third of all tribes now operate some form of gambling enterprise. Economic prosperity is, ironically, being used to lobby Congress in record proportions.

Scholarship funds from the federal government have sent hundreds of American Indians to prestigious law schools, and they are returning well-versed in the court rulings, treaties and laws that gave the tribes more independence. Individual tribes pool legal resources with the idea that a threat to one tribe is a threat to all.

Perhaps it is this convergence of economic success, legal talent and lobbying that is causing some discomfort among politicians and citizens not used to sharing the pie.

All voices heard

Taryn Wahlquist
Alton, Ill.

I am writing in response to the letter titled "Attitude of Gratitude," which appeared in the Readers' Forum on Thursday. While I see the author's point, I would like to offer an alternative way of looking at what he calls whiny letters.

I love reading the letters that complain about things. Besides the fact that they normally give me a good laugh, I'm always thrilled to see someone caring about something enough to write about it. If something really bothers someone, why shouldn't she or he write a letter to the editor? Shouldn't this person expect his or her voice to be heard?

Sure, some complaints may seem petty or trifling, but they may really matter to others. You may think it's ridiculous to get angry about people stopping on the sidewalks to talk, but to others of us it is a very real point of tension. It's not fair to expect others to care about the same things you care about and not care about the same things you don't care about. People deserve to have their voices heard. I hope that no one will stifle their voice simply because a few people out there think you're being petty or whiny. Please, whine all you want. It's my favorite part of The Daily Universe.

Giving thanks

Desiree Kidman
Brookfield, Wis.

I would just like to congratulate the BYU community for beginning to shift our attitudes, generating more optimism and gratitude. The opinion page for March 3 was almost entirely positive. It included a refreshingly appropriate letter from Rush Sumpter, the Honor Code Office director, which actually thanked students for their support of the Honor Code. The ESC custodial staff politely reminded us to help them keep campus clean. The other letters also had positive overtones.

On Thursday, the Opinion section rightly acknowledged the change of attitude in the Honor Code Office and Student Honor Association. It then politely encouraged the community to do their part. Letters thanking the School of Music for the Devotional and applauding recycling on campus were great. In other words, BYU I'm proud of you!

I know that there are problems in the BYU community, and I don't want them to be ignored. Let's continue to work out our problems gently — and prayerfully. But, for the purposes of this letter, I would just like to thank a few people. Thank you to the great Cougar, Bookstore, library, copy center and other offices and organizations for being polite and helpful. Thanks to the custodial and grounds crews for making our campus a nice place to be, and for being congenial even when some of you get up at 3:30 a.m. to clean. Thanks to all the professors and staff who make learning at BYU a good experience. Thanks to the volunteers and flier hander-outers in front of the library for keeping us informed in a generally pleasant way. There are a lot of other people to thank as well, and I urge us all to do so. Above all, let's give thanks to God for letting us be here.

BYU is a great place and I am glad to be here. Once again, congratulations to everyone who is trying to change attitudes and be optimistic (like our prophet). Keep it up! Good luck to you all.

Fresh mold advice

Charlton D. Rose
Claremont, Calif.

Mold is a serious health hazard that plagues many homes during winter. Early last month, the Wymount Housing Office distributed a newsletter with tips on how to fight mold. Although the information contained therein is useful for those who already have mold, it does not offer accurate information on how to prevent it.

The best strategy for fighting mold is to eliminate the environment in which it thrives. When the walls and windows in your home are cold, the moisture in the air condenses on these cold surfaces and trickles off to a stagnant location, feeding a perpetually damp environment where mold can form.

No matter how warm you keep the air in your home, the walls and windows will still get cold — especially if your walls are made of brick. You can reduce the dampness that accumulates in mold-prone areas by keeping the air inside your home dry.

Most of the moisture that accumulates in your home originates from two sources: the most obvious source is running hot water. The second and less obvious source of indoor moisture is natural gas combustion. Most people aren't aware that the two main byproducts of burning natural gas are carbon dioxide and water. Yes, water! All of your indoor gas appliances can contribute immensely to your indoor moisture levels and promote the growth of mold. Even when gas appliances aren't running, the pilot lights still add moisture to the air.

Being aware of these two sources is helpful because it allows you to adjust your habits and keep the moisture levels down. Whenever you take a shower or cook, you should open a window — a crack is all that is necessary — and run a ventilation fan if you have one. When you sleep at night, pile on the blankets and turn your heater down or off. When the weather outside is nice, open everything wide and get a fresh exchange of air.

If you come in from the cold and your glasses fog up, then your indoor air is too moist. If your windows are always fogged up, then you probably have mold growing somewhere.

My wife and I used to struggle with our own Wymount variety of mold. Since we began applying the principles outlined above, however, our apartment has been mold-free.

School a game

Sean Otto
Provo

It has been said that life is a big game. In many cases, I agree. Here are some examples: The game of getting an apartment, not offending your neighbor, acting perfect, haggling with your landlord after you get your apartment, schmoozing with your boss and co-workers and, most important of all, dating (those of you who don't agree it is a game lack experience, haven't given it enough thought, or are guileless). Amid all these games, we, the university community, fall into the demanding game of education.

One nice thing about the game of education is that students can always win. No matter how hard you teachers try, we can always memorize and regurgitate what you want. Then (the best part of all) we can forget the material right in front of your eyes.

Yes, we students, in our captive states, have our fun too. I agree that in every discipline there is a fair amount of basic knowledge that needs to be memorized so as to be acquainted with the discipline at hand.

But is this game of education to supersede the true aspect of learning? You rarely get the A using freedom of thought, and you are rarely allowed to experience a discipline as the teacher does.

I recognize the fact that society has certain demands, and does burden us. But there are ways to work with in the system.

I want to commend those students who try to help their professors strive for higher methods of teaching. Personally, I think it might be appropriate to put the newly built gallows to good use with some of our stubborn captors. In summation, I would really like to thank those among the professors and teachers that seek to help us get experience and evolve in this game of learning.

Hate to see you

Dave Wood
Maplewood, N.J.

I have a letter of apology to the entire BYU campus regarding the football season we endured in 1996. I hope our talented team suffered defeats against lesser opponents to prove to me: I have a losing football team. I have a losing football team.

I am from New Jersey and I love the Giants and the Jets, both of which had losing seasons for a number of years. The Jets even spent $79 million on a new stadium two years ago and still could not win a football game (they only have one win in 1997).

I watched my high school suffer through football losses and I went to the game. I heard that BYU was in the Cotton Bowl my senior year and I got excited about the possibility of watching a successful football team.

So what does this all mean? Well, it happened to the sports world when the ball curse came to Utah.

The Jets compiled a 10-4 record in 1996. The Giants had a winning record, made the playoffs. Come Christmas, I got to watch the Jets play the Lions with playoff implications. The Jets, thanks to the amazing Barry Sanders, won the game just as the second half began. The Giants squandered their lead and their great season. Please never forget the Jets' victory over the Lions. I lost AFTER I started watching. I happen to be a Marching Lion and I attended many of our football games. I think the effect I've had on the team is just as the second half began. Fortunately for everyone, BYU has two successful football seasons in a row. My curse with me on my mission, then return to watch the wily and horrible curse wreak havoc on the Stadium. Sorry everyone.

Dress well thyself

Matthew Hall
Provo

The trend today is to dress as casually as possible. I enjoy casual dress as much as anyone, yet I take issue with the trend to pass into contexts where it is inappropriate.

First, casual clothes are inappropriate for a concert. The motivation for "bedroom" clothing is not of elitism, nor of having a "cool" image. For me, it's a matter of respect for performers. They have put considerable work into preparing a performance. Don't they deserve acknowledgment of their efforts and an outward token?

When I attended a concert at the Arts Center the other night, I was surprised to see some people who could have been in the Nutty Putty caves.

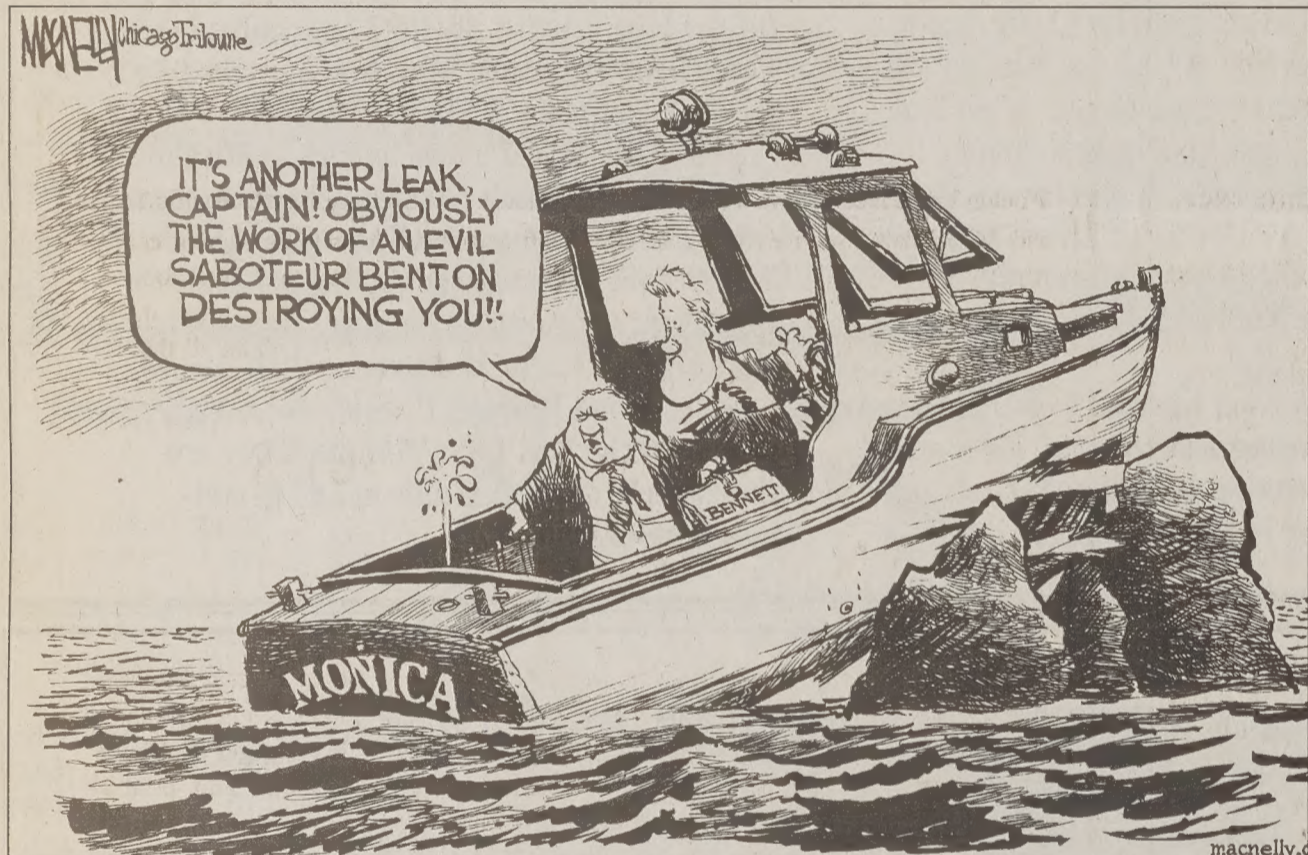

They did not do anything that was disrespectful, but the message seemed to be "I don't care."

Second, this trend has moved into Sunday worship. The outfit of choice seems to be a blue denim shirt and jeans. There is not enough room for a multiple 72-hour post-church outfit of choice is a blue denim shirt.

For me, it's simply easier to dress throughout the whole day when I know I'm going to reinforce a sense of respect. The outward display reflects attitudes. Our behavior tends to reflect our dress.

Viewpoint

Stopping sexual assault

(U-WIRE) NEW HAVEN, Conn. — It was a high school graduation party any John Hughes movie would have been proud of: music blasting out the windows, wary cops cruising by every few minutes and a houseful of drunken fellow seniors. I was getting into my car when a petite blonde stumbled across the lawn and onto the sidewalk, her boyfriend in pursuit, bellowing her name. They were an All-American couple — she, a cheerleader, he, a fabulous running back — and they were well-known for their violent bouts of screaming, crying, clawing and hitting, which often took place in the halls of our high school. I called her name, gesturing to the car. "Do you want me to take you home?" She shook her head no just as he reached her, wrenching her arm back and flipping her over his shoulder.

I left. I talked about the incident with friends later: He's a terrible person. Yes. I tried to help her. Yes. I did all I could. Yes. I shouldn't feel responsible. Shrug. It sounds a lot like the lunch table dialogues last week after the Yale Daily News reported the alleged sexual assault of a Yale junior by two male acquaintances: she was alone, nothing anyone could do. Yes. She put herself in that situation. Yes. We shouldn't feel responsible. Shrug. It's a simple and reassuring justification: We couldn't prevent it and it's none of our business. Though this particular case matters significantly to the people intimately involved, those of us who know neither the alleged victim nor perpetrators what matters most is not who did what, but what we do and say in response. That means asking the harder questions:

- How did it happen here?
- How many similar incidents go unreported?
- Who should feel responsible?

They can't be answered with a self-assuring "yes" or shrug. The discussions last week all started to sound the same, intoning identical lists of blame: frats, athletic teams and university administration. What was missing was the "us" in the equation: on our campus, at our parties, to our friends. In fact, despite the Animal House myth, it has not yet been conclusively proven that more sexual assaults are committed by fraternity members or athletes. However, psychologists have found a relationship between peer support for use of coercion or violence against women and sexual assault. It's a no-brainer, really: if your friends talk about women like they're pieces of furniture, it's going to be hard to resist that mindset yourself.

So, while frat houses and athletic teams provide very structured environments in which this kind of social conditioning can occur, any small group of friends with a couple pornos and a smattering of "let's get her drunk" invocations can recreate it. But relegating sexual assault to a few fringe groups is damaging and dangerous; not only does it harm the men who choose to participate in these traditional forms of college culture, but it lulls the rest of us into complacency.

I walked away once and it was easy. It's a lot harder to get involved, to tell someone you respect and care about that he is out of line, or has had too much to drink, that you think the way he treats his girlfriend is criminal, or simply even to cut the misogynist jokes out of his repertoire.

It doesn't mean that everyone has to be out posterizing or counseling for crisis hot lines, though that work is certainly necessary to eradicating and dealing with incidents like the one two weeks ago. But we do control the environment on campus in subtle ways; whether that means a fraternity co-sponsoring a workshop on sexual assault, speaking out about one's own experiences, or telling your best friend it's time for him to go home — alone. We could retreat to the notion that sexual assault doesn't happen — at least until the next time a woman is again brave enough to put her reputation on the line and knock us out of complacency.

fee slows rush to endorse

ELIESE FILLMORE
Universe Staff Writer

line policy for ecclesiastical endorsements has caused some delay in the task.

It's been a priority yet. I'll get it when I get around to it. West, 21, a sophomore from Barbara, Calif., majoring in psychology, is glad the deadline was set because he has been able to focus on more pressing things, like his job. He said he will not be taking care of it if not taken care of.

Office employees said it has been a good idea to set the deadline and late-fee policy.

helpful because the fees are a hardship to students. Suzanne Crowther, the Office endorsement specialist, said things have been run smoother this year. One more student has written a commitment statement, she said.

There has been a steady flow of endorsements coming in, but slightly below the year's flow, Crowther said.

There are still a large number of students who will be continuing to have not yet submitted their endorsements, and perhaps it is because they think they do not need to.

Crowther said one problem has been reaching and reminding students who spend very little time on campus and attend family wards.

All students should keep in mind that priority registration begins April 6, and failing to submit an ecclesiastical endorsement will deny students the registration privilege.

Crowther, Ted Hindmarsh and Rush Sumpter, Honor Code Office employees, compiled the top 10 reasons students incorrectly assume they will not need to be endorsed and the official responses to these assumptions:

10. I'M GETTING MARRIED — Neither achieving marital status, nor the temple recommend required to get that way, replace an endorsement.

9. I'M GOING TO GRADUATE — Congratulations! But if you can't get that last required class, unexpectedly need to re-take a class or need to finish up that thesis project, you will need an endorsement after all.

8. I'M GOING ON A MISSION — Good for you! But an unexpected family crisis or quirk in timing can change the most meticulous plans. By the way, be sure to get a mission deferment from Admissions before you leave.

7. I'M NOT SURE WHAT I'LL BE DOING IN THE FALL — Plans have a way of coming into focus or changing at the last minute; sometimes transfers to other schools or pending jobs are unpredictable.

6. I HAVE A TEMPLE RECOMMEND. WON'T THAT DO? — Temple recommends are good, but they have a very specific purpose that does not include continuation at BYU.

5. I'M JUST ATTENDING EVENING SCHOOL (OR JUST PART-TIME) — If your registration status is "day, continuing," you need an endorsement. However, that does not apply to Independent Study.

4. I JUST GOT HERE! I WAS ENDORSED WHEN I WAS ADMITTED — Endorsements are valid from Fall Semester to Fall Semester and must be renewed for every academic year after you have been admitted.

3. AN INTERNSHIP, STUDY ABROAD, ETC. WILL TAKE ME AWAY FROM CAMPUS FALL SEMESTER. — Both of these, and similar programs, require an endorsement.

2. I'M A GRADUATE STUDENT; I'M EXEMPT — Although it's true that rank has its privileges, all continuing students, including graduate students, need a yearly endorsement.

1. I'M TOO BUSY, AND SO IS MY BISHOP! — We know; who isn't? But there is always time to do really important things, and the endorsement is a really important thing.

Teachers honored at luncheon

By MALI HEGDAHL
Universe Staff Writer

To conclude Teaching Appreciation Week, students' favorite professors were honored at a luncheon Saturday.

The Student Alumni Association honored 71 professors by giving them the Student Award for Excellence in Teaching.

Graduating seniors voted for their favorite professor in their department, said Roxane Olsen, SAA president. They also voted for their favorite religion and professor overall, she said.

"I think the award is a wonderful way to recognize professors and their efforts in teaching and helping the students," Olsen said.

The award allows students to voice their opinion about who they felt helped prepare them best for life, said Matthew Bond, SAA vice president.

The professors hear the great things their students say about them, and it provides more incentive to continue excelling in their teaching abilities, Bond said.

Reed A. Benson, honored in the Religion Department, said receiving the award was a humbling experience.

"There are so many good teachers out there who are equally qualified that I have mixed emotions about being singled out," Benson said.

He said he wishes he could thank the students who were kind in their gratitude for his efforts.

Gary M. Booth, professor in the College of Biology and Agriculture, said the award means a lot to him because it comes from the students' hearts.

He said it is important for professors to always remember that the students are the lifeblood of the professors.

"We must never forget that we are stewards," Booth said.

As professors received their plaques at the luncheon, comments from anonymous students were read about them.

Of Mark Ricard, professor in the Physical Education Department, students said, "He was always more concerned about the students than anything else. He taught us the class material, but we learned religion from his example."

Of Alvin H. Price, professor in the Family Sciences Department, students said, "Even though I was one of 250 students in his class, I felt a concern on his part for me personally. He taught me the most applicable life skills I received while here at BYU."

Remarks such as these were common among all those who were given the award, Olsen said.

Brian Miller, SAA vice president, said he thinks the award is an excellent way to show the students' gratitude for the outstanding teachers on campus.

"I don't think they (the teachers) receive enough appreciation or thanks from the students," Miller said.

Career fair to link students with jobs

By ESTHER YU
Universe Staff Writer

Internship and job opportunities are available at the Department of Communication's first career fair Friday.

Students will have a chance to meet with a variety of businesses and public relations and advertising agencies such as The Salt Lake Tribune, Western Wats and Nu Skin.

Although most of the companies who will take part in the fair have openings geared toward communication majors, a few companies will be looking for students in other departments of the College of Fine Arts and Communications, said Laurie J. Wilson, chair of the Department of Communications.

There will be booths for the design program in the Visual Arts Department and for Theatre and Media Arts, Wilson said.

Students can come prepared to interview in the time slot they signed up for, or they can come as walk-ins when open slots available. However, it would be preferred if students signed up for the interview slots before hand, said Patrice Sheffer, director of the internship office in the Department of Communications.

"We would like students that are serious about employment to come, ready to take a job with the employers," Sheffer said.

The fair will also feature workshops on various job skills. Lecturers at the sessions will teach students about dressing for the job, developing interviewing skills, preparing their resume and other professional skills that employers look for, Sheffer said.

A booth for resume critique will also give students an opportunity to improve their resumes.

Preparations for the Department of Communication's first fair began in January. The idea was to help students move away from their college-oriented classroom situations and give them a more professional presentation they could use in the job market, Sheffer said.

"We have had a number of employers from out-of-state indicate that they would be interested in looking at our students and graduates," Wilson said, "but we needed to find a systematic way to enable them to do that."

Wilson said she hopes the fair will accomplish two things, helping companies find the students they want and filling the needs of the students.

Faculty in the Department of Communication who are involved with the career fair are really trying to get the students to come, Sheffer said.

The fair will be from noon to 4 p.m. in the Main Gallery of the Harris Fine Arts Center. Students can sign up for interviews in F-340 HFAC.

wade through. (Indiana Jones isn't even a horror film.)

In another scene that is supposed to be scary, Martha induces Helen's delivery and comes after her with a needle — a scene that is not very threatening for those who have seen their share of doctors or needles.

The conflict is resolved too easily anyway.

The previews show clips of the most intense scenes so there are not many surprises. The previews almost spoil anything that could have been frightening.

The script is lacking and not written well. The evil mother-in-law premise is cliché.

There are so many unanswered questions: Why didn't Jackson know his mom was a psycho in the first place, and how was Martha able to deceive everyone for so long?

One scene reveals that the random attack Helen faced in New York was planned by Martha, but the motivation is unclear. Other scenes are contrived and are not adequately tied together.

The weak climax comes at the end of the movie and lacks intensity.

On the other hand, "Hush" is well acted. Lange does a good job of playing a demented mother who covers up her neurosis well.

Paltrow isn't as believable but does a fairly good job of reacting to the discovery of her mother-in-law's dementia.

Jackson's character is less demanding, so the actor pulls his role off pretty well. The acting is pretty consistent.

Those wanting an intense thriller should choose a different movie because "Hush" is anything but.

The easy resolutions and contrived scenes are a disappointment.

Jessica Lange portrays the evil mother, Martha, in a new thriller movie "Hush." The movie doesn't have much horror to it, however, leaving this reviewer feeling less than scared.

Men's swim team takes second at WAC meet

By COREY DAVIS

Universe Sports Writer

With eight individual wins and 14 school records, BYU's swimming and diving team splashed into second place at the WAC championships in San Antonio, Texas.

The competition ended Saturday with Southern Methodist University in first with 728.5 points, BYU second with 594.5 and UNLV in third with 570. Utah came in fourth with 397 points. Even though the Cougars weren't able to take first, they were able to win more individual events than any other team.

BYU was only nine points behind the leader after the first day of competition Thursday. But Friday, SMU increased its lead over BYU to 59 points.

During the competition, the freshmen proved their worth to the team. Freshman Justin Wilcock dominated the diving competitions by taking first in the one and three-meter spring board. At the championships, Wilcock was honored as diver of the year.

Freshman Arunas Savickas swam his best time of the season at 4:23.01 in the 500-yard free and beat 1997 WAC champion Blaine Morgan, a junior from SMU. Savickas continued his success by swimming a conference record in the 200-yard backstroke. Savickas was honored as the WAC's freshman swimmer of the year.

Senior Byron Shefchik swam conference-record times in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke. Shefchik's 100-yard time of 54.46 broke the previous record of 54.60 set in 1988 by former swimmer and current head coach of Wyoming Mark Miller.

The Cougars coaching staff received WAC recognition as well. The men's swimming coach, Tim Powers, received WAC honors for swim coach of the year. Keith Russell, BYU's diving coach, was honored as the WAC's diving coach of the year.

"We feel the program is really going in the right direction," Powers said.

The N C A A Championships still remain for the swimmers. As of now, Savickas has qualified to compete in the backstroke and 500-yard freestyle. Shefchik has qualified in the 200-yard individual medley, and Junior Dmitri Malinovski has qualified in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Powers said he is impressed with this team's performance.

"If we put together an All-Star team of our past greats, they wouldn't beat these guys," Powers said.

In the past, BYU has not been considered as a swimming powerhouse — but this is changing.

"We're swimming with or better than the big (schools)," Powers said. With the success BYU is having this season, its swimming program is gaining recognition. The team is going to go through changes after this season. Ten members will leave the team to go on missions, and three seniors will be graduating. BYU will be welcoming five new members that will be returning from missions. Powers said he knows the team will be different next year and is working to get new recruits.

Four WAC teams get invitation to play in the NIT tournament

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Gonzaga is happy just going anywhere to play basketball after the regular season ends.

"Today's like Christmas for us," Gonzaga coach Dan Monson said. "You ask Santa for a present, and we maybe didn't get what we wanted. But we're still opening a gift, and we're not going to be ungrateful for that."

So what if the Bulldogs won't be heading to the NCAA for the second time in four years.

Instead, after posting a gaudy 23-9 record, Gonzaga is going to the National Invitation Tournament and a first-round date on Wednesday at Wyoming (19-8).

It will be the Bulldogs' third trip to the nation's oldest postseason party. In 1994, the Bulldogs made the NIT for the first time, then were selected again by the NIT in 1996.

A private Jesuit-run university best known for former students Bing Crosby and Utah Jazz guard John Stockton, Gonzaga's top players now are senior forward Bakari Hendrix, who led the West Coast Conference with 19.6 points per game, and sophomore guard Matt Santangelo, who averaged 16.5 points.

Gonzaga won the West Coast Conference regular-season title with a 10-4 record, but lost to San Francisco in the WCC tournament championship game. A victory would have given Gonzaga an automatic NCAA berth.

"For Gonzaga to be disappointed at not being in the NCAA tournament means our program has come a long way," Monson said.

Only Pacific has won more games this season than Gonzaga among the teams in the NIT. Pacific (24-9) will be at home against Fresno State (18-11).

Ten teams picked by the NIT have won 20 or more games.

Besides Wyoming and Fresno State, two other Western Athletic Conference (WAC) teams are in the 32-team NIT field. Hawaii (19-8) will be host to Arizona State (18-13), while Colorado State (20-8) travels to Minnesota (15-15), the 1993 NIT champion.

"We prefer the NCAA, but we're happy it's the NIT as a secondary reward for the team," Hawaii coach Riley Wallace said.

Like the WAC, the Southeastern Conference (SEC) also has four teams in the NIT: Vanderbilt, Georgia, Florida and Auburn.

Vanderbilt (18-12) opens at home against St. Bonaventure (17-14), Georgia (16-14) travels to Iowa (20-10), Florida (14-14) is at home against Georgetown (15-14) and Auburn (15-12) will be host to Southern Mississippi (22-10).

All first-round matches in the 32-team postseason tournament will be played Wednesday, with the exception of North Carolina-Wilmington (20-10) at Wake Forest (15-13), which is scheduled for Thursday.

The second round will be played March 16-17 and the third round March 18-20 before the final four teams head to New York's Madison Square Garden, with the semifinals set for March 24 and the championship game to be played March 26.

Other first-round matches will have Kansas State (17-11) at North Carolina State (16-14), Rider (18-9) at Penn State (15-12), Long Island University (21-10) at Dayton (20-11), Seton Hall (15-14) at Georgia Tech (17-13), Ball State (21-7) at Memphis (16-11), Creighton (18-9) at Marquette (18-10), and Alabama-Birmingham (20-11) at Missouri (17-14).

LIU played in the first NIT in 1938 and won the tournament in 1939 and 1941. Vanderbilt captured the crown in 1990.

Tennis team wins 3 on the road

By ROMNEY M. STEWART

Universe Sports Writer

Good things come in threes, as the BYU women's tennis team showed in Kansas this past weekend by upsetting No. 11 William & Mary, and defeating Kansas State and Kansas.

The No. 14 Cougars beat William & Mary 5-4 Saturday in Lawrence, Kan. In singles, Holly Parkinson and Eline Chiew played well, winning their matches at the No. 1 and 2 spots. Parkinson was victorious 7-6, (7-4), and 6-3, while Chiew improved her dual match record to 11-0, winning 6-3, 6-2.

Adrien Jenkins and Australian freshman Brooke Leavens also won their singles matches to give the Cougars a 4-2 lead going into doubles play.

The final blow for a stubborn William & Mary team came when Parkinson, teamed with Jodi Richardson clinched a doubles win 8-5.

"This is a good win," said head coach Clark Barton. "This should really help us in the rankings, beating a team like William & Mary. We want to get into the Top 10 and stay there, so hopefully this will help us do that."

Monday it was off to Manhattan, Kan., where the Cougars rearranged their doubles line-up to defeat the Wildcats of Kansas State in a dual match 6-3.

"We've got several options for us in our doubles play and that's very good news for us, especially when we play some very tough dual teams later on in the season," Barton said.

Barton credited the strong singles play of Richardson and Leavens as a big factor in what was the Cougars third match in five days. Leavens defeated Dinah Watson 6-2 and Richardson beat Lena Pilipchak 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

"Brooke has really come on strong for us. We've been playing very tough teams and she's playing very good tennis," Barton said. "Jodi is also playing well for us right now and we felt confident in her abilities to move her up to the number four singles spot."

Chiew continued to improve her undefeated singles dual match play with a two-set, 7-5, 6-4 victory over Anna Pampoulova.

Chiew is now 11-0 in singles match contests.

At the No. 1 position, Holly Parkinson lost to Dorodnova 6-4, 6-2.

Friday, in the first day of action, the Cougars squared off with host Kansas University, winning three doubles matches to the Jayhawks 6-3 in dual matches. Chiew, Parkinson and Leavens claimed victory in their matches, bringing BYU to the top before entering double play.

"The top of our line-up played tremendously," Barton said.

This weekend the Cougars home to entertain North Carolina-Clemson Friday and Saturday.

Flyers coach demoted after loss

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Wayne Cashman is out as coach of the slumping Philadelphia Flyers, demoted to an assistant and replaced by Roger Neilson, a hockey nomad if ever there was one.

With the team on a 4-8 skid, the Flyers on Monday removed Cashman 61 games into his rookie season - the shortest coaching stint in Flyers' history.

"We hope for the best, you know," said injured Flyers star Eric Lindros. "We weren't playing too tough, but at the same time our record wasn't too bad."

Neilson, an assistant with the St. Louis Blues, becomes an NHL head coach with his seventh team. No one in NHL history has coached more teams, and Neilson knows all too well the burden of expectations.

In 1991-92, he led the New York Rangers to a first-place regular-season finish, then got fired the next season. He coached the Florida Panthers, an expansion team, within a point of the playoffs in their first two seasons, and still lost his job months later.

His other head coaching jobs were with Toronto, Buffalo, Vancouver and Los Angeles. He reached the finals once, with Vancouver in 1982.

His record with his six teams is 367-320-126. Now his next project is Philadelphia, whose record is 32-20-9.

"We know this team has the size, speed and depth to be a contender," said Neilson, 63, an assistant with the Blues for three years. "I don't think there's a lot of changing needed. But there'll be some new things, with a new coach."

Cashman replaced Terry Murray after the Flyers were swept in the Stanley Cup finals.

He will keep the $2.45 million, three-year contract he signed this season.

felt great.

Then I realized what had been missing from my BYU experience. I began to admire Utah fans for what they were doing. They taunted our players and loudly supported their team. Once I developed a hate for our rival, I began to enjoy WAC basketball much more because not only did I cheer for BYU, I could now cheer against Utah. After all, they are our rival. Instead of wondering why Utah fans hate us so much, I questioned why we do not hate Utah like they hate us. Granted, there are some loyal BYU fans who cringe at the sight of the color red and are quick to point out that our rivals' shade of choice mirrors that of one who has horns and carries a pitchfork.

However, there are several who will be cheering for the Utes come Thursday when Utah meets San Francisco and Louisville in the first round of the NCAA men's and women's tournament respectively. As of now, that is not acceptable to me.

I guess those fans have taken the golden rule a little too far and placed it on sporting events. Well, I for one would like for all BYU fans to live by the Law of Moses when it comes to our athletic teams. Eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth. Can anyone really imagine a Utah fan cheering for a BYU fan in the NCAA tournament? I cannot. Not after last week.

So join with me in cheering for San Francisco and Louisville. Even though our teams have long since been eliminated, it is our duty to cheer against Utah. Believe me, it not only makes sense, it makes things fun.

Baseball team swept by Rice over weekend

By BRENDAN BURKE

Universe Sports Writer

Rice University dealt the BYU baseball team three straight losses in two days last weekend in Houston.

Owls sophomore Jeff Nichols struck out 11 Cougars in a 6-1 Rice win Friday. Nichols, who also beat BYU last year at the Western Athletic Conference championships, limited the Cougars to four hits.

Nichols allowed only three singles and one double. The ninth-inning double by junior second baseman Chris Circuit, who is hitting .338, led to the Cougars' only run.

Rice junior Kevin Hodge made life hard for BYU when he hit a two-run single in the first inning and a solo home run in the sixth.

The Saturday doubleheader started with Owls sophomore Mario Ramos pitching a complete game three-hitter for a 9-2 Rice win. Junior infielder Ryan Pond, averaging .343 on the year, hit a two-run homer for BYU in the seventh.

In the Rice's 11-3 nightcap victory,

Owls junior Damon Thames keyed the Rice attack with a solo homer in the second inning, a fourth-inning one-run triple and a bases-loaded double for three RBI in the fifth.

BYU head coach Gary Pullins knew the series against No. 11 Rice would be a challenge.

"They are coming off a year where they are the defending WAC champion, won the regionals and went to the College World Series," Pullins said.

Rice, however, is not entitled to all the bragging rights. BYU finished last year's season as the NCAA top-ranked scoring team (10.71) and No. 2 batting team, averaging .363, second only to Delaware's .365.

The Cougars also ranked seventh in home runs per game, 1.89; seventh in slugging percentage, .600; 15th in double plays per game, 2.51; and 33rd in won/loss percentage, .673.

They are also the NCAA's 23rd winningest team in the 1990s (.655).

Despite the Cougars' fall to 10-7 overall and 3-3 in the WAC, Pullins remains optimistic.

"Our ballclub is starting to play very well," Pullins said.

"There have been a few lapses, but overall the ballclub has come through challenging times and shown great tenacity, shown the ability to come from behind, and the ability to stay focused. I am pleased with our progress this far in the season," Pullins said.

The Cougars remain in Texas to start the Irish Baseball Classic against the University of Texas-San Antonio today, followed by games against Incarnate Word University on Wednesday, the University of Notre Dame on Thursday and the University of Southern Illinois on Friday.
